

Territorial Claims

Early Southern Ocean explorers, sealers and whalers claimed the islands closest to Antarctica for their countries, as they discovered them in the late 1700s and early 1800s. Once expeditions began to discover the Antarctic continent, they too claimed the parts they saw.

Seven Antarctic territorial claims still exist today.

